A. Students are both members of the external community, as well as members of the internal academic community of the College itself. As citizens of the external community, students are subject to all civil laws, the enforcement of which is the responsibility of civil authorities. As members of the academic community, students are subject to Gaston College regulations and obligations which accrue to them by virtue of their membership in the academic community. College students are adults and are expected to exercise mature and responsible self-discipline, to behave with courtesy and integrity, and to maintain required standards.

B. Continuing enrollment at Gaston College depends upon maintaining appropriate academic and conduct standards. Failure to maintain required standards can lead to conditional enrollment or curtailment of enrollment. These standards and enrollment constraints are described in the following procedures.
